July 2019

July 2019. Congratulations to Simon Best and Caduceus Magazine who recently published a milestone 100th edition. www.caduceus.info

One article in the 100th edition is about the subject of 5G. As we have received a number of articles about this subject a brief layman's guide is presented below.

What is 5G?

If you browse the mainstream media you'll be led to believe that 5G is an amazing, next-generation wireless technology that will make everything faster, easier, and more incredible.

A 5G network will certainly increase data speed to the point that a movie can be downloaded in seconds. It will provide higher resolution and bandwidth reducing latency (stops and delays) and lower battery consumption so that network energy usage falls by 90%. Several hundreds and thousands of computers will be able to access simultaneous connections at a very high rate. Spectral efficiency will also be increased, improving the efficiency of smartphones by increasing their speed and also introducing VR(virtual reality) and AR(Augmented reality) into the smartphone sector.

5G will also bring a bigger societal change by starting the era of driverless smart cars, real time traffic management systems, health related technology and smart homes. Leading telecommunication giants like Apple, Airtel, BSNl and Nokia have already started working with 5G technology in these areas.

It all sounds great, instant access and infinite bandwidth from anywhere in the world, but what is 5G? Put simply it represents signal densification and with it an involuntary increase in exposure to wireless radiation. The first generation (1G) was wireless; the voice. 2G allowed both talk and text, 3G the internet in a limited way, with today's technology with 4G, completing that digital migration.

While 4G frequencies go as high as 6 GHz, 5G exposes biological life to pulsed signals in the 30 GHz to 100 GHz range. 5G represents the worst kind of microwave radiation known to biological life, so harmful that it has the potential to be used as a weapon.

In 2015 215 scientists from 41 countries communicated their alarm to the United Nations and World Health Organisation stating that numerous recent scientific publications have shown that EMF (electro-magnetic fields) affect living organisms at all levels, well below the levels for most international and national guidelines.

A 2017 report by more than 230 scientists and doctors also expressed serious concerns about steadily expanding exposure to Electromagnetic Frequencies. These effects include increased cancer risk, cellular stress, increase in harmful free radicals, genetic damages, structural and functional changes to the human reproductive system, learning and memory defects, neurological disorders and negative impacts on general well-being in humans. Damage goes well beyond humans, as there is mounting evidence of deleterious effects to plants, insects and animals.

We are using the INTERNET and wireless technology more and more. Each day we create an estimated 2.5 quintillion bytes of data. Each minute we add 527,760 photos for sharing on Snapchat, 456,000 tweets are sent and 510,000 comments on posted on Facebook. How prepared are we to reconsider how we use this resource without proper consideration of the impacts?

The prevention of natural disasters is one use of 5G cited by the telecommunications industry but there is no clear evidence to say that 5G is safe and won't itself manifest as a natural disaster. The international appeal to stop the rollout of 5G now has over 100,000 signatures from 187 countries and further information about 5G can be found at the appeal's web site www.5gspaceappeal.org as well as in the latest edition of Caduceus magazine. ## Edgar Cayce's Atlantis

by Nigel Blair

The 14,000 "psychic readings" given in a trance state by Edgar Cayce, the famous American clairvoyant, not only diagnosed ailments with proven extraordinary accuracy, but in some cases took people back into supposed "past lives".

No less than 700 of Cayce's readings refer to lives in Atlantis, which is placed squarely in the Atlantic. When they are pieced together, they trace the history of Atlantis from its beginnings to its Golden Age, with (according to Cayce) great stone cities which had much advanced modern technology. This included mass communication, air and underwater transport, and some inventions that even we today have not achieved, such as the neutralization of gravity and the use of solar energy through electric crystals. A great, central crystal concentrated the sun's rays and beamed them to cities, ships and aircraft as an almost unlimited, non-polluting form of power.

Misuse of these crystals, Cayce stated, caused two of the cataclysms that ultimately were to destroy Atlantis. They were first used against giant mammoths which threatened the people, later, it seems, as a weapon. Combined with Earth stresses happening anyway because the molten core was cooling, their energies de-stabilised the delicate tectonic plate systems causing earthquakes, volcanoes and sinkings of parts of the then enormous Atlantean continent. The first big sinking, according to Cayce, was in 48,000 BC.

In Lemuria, the Pacific continent, the wise men foretold it: many emigrated to Asia, Africa or America, where they were regarded as superior by the natives, and spread the knowledge of the One God. Many Atlanteans migrated to Central America, Egypt, North Africa or Spain, establishing civilizations there, and especially pyramids. When the catastrophe came, the Earth (or its crust) shifted on its axis, causing great upheavals. Lemuria mostly sank into the Pacific, though leaving some large islands. New mountain ranges may have been created, with some cities possibly left thousands of feet up. Some Atlantean land sank, but most remained. Torrid zones became frigid, and visa-versa. Great mammoth like beasts that had overrun the Earth were largely killed off. Millions of souls returned to the spirit state, and some had to return to learn karmic lessons in later lives.

Atlantis became the undisputed leader of the world. Science and invention became its new god, scientists its effective rulers. Life on Atlantis was luxurious; it was in the torrid zone, and people grew lazy. The giant crystal, known as the "Firestone", was used for destructive purposes, including torture and punishment. It was also, Cayce says, tuned unintentionally too high; its rays combined with other electrical forces to start many fires deep inside the planet, leading to great volcanoes and then the second sinking, of further parts of Atlantis, in c. 28,000 BC, leaving the "Sargasso Sea" of weeds in the Western Atlantic as a remnant. Some speculate that the great crystal is still submerged there. Could its magnetic effects, even from the sea-bed, be causing strange effects on compasses and electrical equipment causing in turn some of the unexplained disappearances in what is known as the "Bermuda Triangle" in this area?

After 28,000 BC, much of Atlantis was still left, and still powerful. Many of its people emigrated and founded colonies in Europe, America and elsewhere. Many Atlanteans had psychic powers, some of which were misused. There was mating of humans with animals, at a time when this was possible, producing a hybrid race of "things" which were then enslaved: a war, of either a psychic or physical nature, ensued between the slave owning "Sons of Belial" and the freedom loving "Sons of the Law of One". This was won by the slave owners (creating a "karma" which, Cayce said, had to be resolved by their coming back in much later lives during the American Civil War in the 1860s, when they lost). The civilization deteriorated; civil discontent, civil war, enslavement of workers, human sacrifice and, in general, misuse of the forces of nature, made the final destruction of the continent certain. Cayce added that one of the "last straws" was the beginning of the use of genetic engineering to take over and misuse the very blueprint for humanity: a challenge we are facing again today.

Around 10,000 BC, according to Cayce, these factors; plus further experimentation with crystals, led to the sinking of the remaining part of Atlantis, leaving only smaller Atlantic islands and the colonies. As we have seen earlier, these were reduced even more in the next few millennia by the rising ocean level.

Cayce gives a very spiritual view of the Atlanteans, like Plato portraying their misdeeds as the direct cause of their destruction and seeing them as eternal souls who came back at various times in later history to learn further lessons. They are coming back today in a critical time, to ensure that Earth, having again reached a high level of science, uses it this time in a constructive way and puts the "Law of One" (love, dedication and truth seeking) before the pursuit of power and purely selfish pleasures. Whatever one thinks of Cayce's details of the Atlantean story, which cannot be confirmed, this is a fine moral viewpoint.
