VOLUME 2, ISSUE 2.

February 2007

Dear WRGN Supporters,

A marvellous start to 2007 with the activities of the network featured in the Western Daily Press and the Western Gazette. The network has also grown to include Stoneseeker Tours of Dorset (www.stoneseeker.net) and Soliluna House Workshops at Glastonbury (www.soliluna.net).

During February we welcome the American healer Don Lavendar who will be giving a demonstration of Equine Assisted Psychotherapy in Dorchester and herald the start of a new monthly meditation group at the Library of Avalon in Glastonbury.

This newsletter contains a full list of the events for the month ahead, reviews of two new books (both with February launch dates) and two articles. The first (from Eastbourne) profiles the work of World in Our Hands. The second (sent from the USA) considers the origin of a mystery skull, work that has become known as the Starchild Project.

Angel Helpers by Father Rene Claudot and the Soul of Britain by Nigel Blair and Sir George Trevelyan are the latest lectures to be added to the on-line digital archive.

World in our Hands – a platform for spiritual and holistic education

Based in Eastbourne East Sussex, World in Our Hands started life quietly by organising two exhibitions, the first promoting Holistic Parenting and then a larger event held at the Eastbourne Winter Gardens covering a variety of spiritual and holistic subjects.

Having organised a series of successful events the project team felt that more was needed and so they founded the Spiritual Forum magazine. Initially circulation covered the Kent and Sussex area, but as its popularity has grown, its distribution has increased significantly.

The success of the magazine meant that the editorial team were invited to some wonderful spiritual events where they began to see a need for a new more innovative project that could effectively convey the energy contained in the wonderful orations given by great speakers, the sense of mystical experience and atmosphere generated at the various gatherings.

A bold plan was formed and the Holistic Channel created to grasp the great leap in technology offered by the advent of broadband: the concept of on-demand television covering all the subjects dear to World in Our Hands.

The channel offers a new approach to the coverage of holistic subjects ensuring that the important aspects are included rather than being consigned to the cutting room floor; providing an opportunity to include as many subjects as possible, from festivals to sustainable lifestyles, from differing beliefs to inspiring people.

A varied and interesting selection of programmes has been assembled and the numbers of viewers are growing every month, with the Holistic Channel connecting to a global audience.

As the project grows we invite contributions from outside sources, people who have made interesting holistic programmes and who would like them shown through an ever-expanding media. If you are a group wanting to get your message out to a wider audience we invite you to contact the Holistic Channel and outline ideas for programmes.

As technology advances so does the channel, at the moment signal is carried by WMV through computers, but as the cutting edge moves forward it will not be long before the Holistic Channel will be seen on domestic television receivers.

Up to now the transmission of knowledge has been in the hands of large commercial television networks. No longer, with broadband television the whole world is an audience.

The Holistic Channel can be viewed at www.holisticchannel.org.uk.

To download Spiritual Forum magazine, visit www.spiritualforum.org.uk.

World in Our Hands also hold regular earth-healing meditations at sacred sites, details of which are on the website, at www.worldinourhands.org.

“The beauty of our planet and the survival of mankind requires a major shift in consciousness. The members of World in Our Hands believe that through education and networking, a new spiritual understanding can be achieved.”

Book Reviews

13 Moons - Conversations with a Goddess by Peter Knight

Guided by a series of visions, dreams and synchronicities the central character in this novel undertakes an incredible journey to receive ancient wisdom and spectacular visions of the past and possible futures. After many challenges 13 insights and other profound messages for Mankind are revealed. Log on to www.stoneseeker.net for further information.

The Snake and the Rope by Dr Edi Bilimoria

Science claims to be objective and to deal only with proven facts, but the innumerable conflicting theories that science propounds remain unresolved. In his book, the author, an engineer and musician, argues with ample supporting evidence that since time immemorial the universal secret wisdom of the Adepts has held answers to all unresolved problems and explains mysteries concerning Divinity, Space and Time, Energy and Matter, and the role of Sound and Light in manifesting the Cosmos. He also makes predictions about the future course of science and suggests how science and occult science may be harmonized.

Mystery Skull Baffles Scientists – The Starchild Project by Lloyd Pie

In the USA a National Geographic TV program called "Is It Real?" featured a highly unusual human-like skull; one that presents a profound mystery to the dozens of scientists who have examined it. Those who worked on it have put the skull through a wide array of technical analyses, producing enough hard facts to suggest the radical interpretation that it might not be entirely human. Consider this range of oddities:

Its eye sockets are skewed downward and are 1/2 normal depth. Its face and jaws are 1/2 normal size. Its brain is 1/3 larger than a skull its size normally holds. It has no vestige of frontal sinuses. It has no "inion," the bump at the lower mid-rear of a human head, where two large neck muscles normally attach. Its neck is centred directly under the cranium's oddly-shaped mass, which seems to be a physical necessity because the neck itself is only 1/2 normal size. The rear of the head, missing its inion, is greatly flattened, though not by mechanical means. It was never cradleboarded, as was common in primitive cultures.

C-14 testing showed the skull is 900 years old. A CAT-scan showed its bone is uniformly 1/2 of normal thickness in all areas except the inner ears, which were significantly larger than normal. It also weighs 1/2 as much as normal. Nonetheless, despite its thinness and lightness it is 2-3 times as hard as normal bone, which is highly unusual. For unknown reasons, the bone somehow became overloaded with far more collagen than normal, an addition that provides extra durability. However, the greatest increase in durability seems to come from the unprecedented "fibres" embedded in the bone's matrix.

A scanning electron microscope showed the "fibres" are so durable that, when cut by a high-speed blade, they shredded rather than sheared off cleanly. We have no idea what they are, or what they are made of, but the photographic evidence is undisputable. Also undisputable are photos of a reddish "residue" deposited in many of the cancellous holes, where marrow normally resides and where absolutely nothing should be 900 years after death. Here, too, we have no idea what it is, we just know it exists and presents yet another baffling mystery that has never been seen before in any kind of bone.

The skull's DNA was analyzed by Trace Genetics, a company that also analyzed the famous "Kennewick Man" skull from Washington State. They began by putting bone samples into the solution that normally dissolves mammalian bone within a week. By the end of a week the bone was unchanged, as it was after two weeks and then two months. The samples had to be dissolved with a strong detergent. When the skull's DNA was finally analyzed, its mitochondrial DNA came up easily and quite clearly, whereas not a wisp of nuclear DNA was recovered in seven thorough attempts. This was a significant failure.

Mitochondrial DNA is passed along through females, and the mystery skull's mother was indeed human. However, nuclear DNA contains genetic material from both parents, and somehow the chemical "primers" that seek out those materials were unable to locate their "human-only" corollaries. This result strongly suggests, but does not conclusively prove, something "other than human" is in the skull's nuclear DNA. Luckily, a solution to the mystery looms on the horizon. The 454 Life Sciences Company has developed a new DNA recovery technique that doesn't use primers, and it is now being used to sequence the Neanderthal genome. This new technique will finally reveal the genetic profile of both of the mystery skull's parents, confirming whether it is entirely human or not.

Lloyd can be contacted by email lloydpye@gmail.com and further details about the project can be found by logging on to www.starchildproject.com or www.lloydpye.com
