VOLUME 3, ISSUE 10.

October 2008

A busy month ahead, not least for Peter Knight and Toni Perrott who are hosting the convention of Alternative Archaeology and Earth Mysteries and launching a new book (see book reviews). Now in its fourth year the convention continues to grow, bringing people together to discuss the latest research on ley lines, dowsing, sacred geometry and Earth-based spiritualities.

The latest addition to the on-line article archive is; the 'Primal Polarity of Man and Woman' by Sir George Trevelyan, with the 'Second Coming of Christ' by Brian Williams the latest addition to the lecture archive.

Serpent Mounds and Cosmic Energy by Miroslav Provod

A Serpent Mound is a clay mound that is shaped in meandering curves that hold more energy in their inner bents due to the increased density of clay. Like other megalithic structures, to function, Serpent Mounds must be placed at a location endowed with cosmic energy.

There were once many serpent mounds, the most perfect design being a mound that looks like a snake that is trying to swallow an egg. Within each structure there are likely to be six locations of a meandering shape with the same energetic value (half of a winding), one location of greater energy in the shape of an egg (one whole winding), one location of even greater energy (a triangular winding) and one last location containing a different degree of energy at the tail, which is formed by the combination of the meander with the spiral.

The energetic properties of the mounds can be demonstrated through an easy experiment that requires a long hose (10m) with water flowing in it and any rock of about 60Kg mass. The rock is placed next to the hose that is laid out linearly (water flowing through it). The energetic gain of the rock is then monitored at various time intervals.

The hose is then placed in a meandered shape, place the rock to its centre and then monitor the energetic gain. Continue with the experiment by forming a whole winding around the rock followed by a variety of other windings. Experiment also with different flow rates in the hose pipe. When the rock is placed away from the source, it will slowly lose its energy. If we replace the rock by a figurant, the matter of its body will be gaining energy in the same way as the rock. One conclusion from these experiments might be that the clay mounds of a serpent shape gave people a place to increase their energy in the same way as menhirs, dolmens and other prehistoric structures.

Water streams are not the only energetic source for the construction of mounds and other similar structures; there could be other sources like underground springs, deposits of metal ores, crossings of zones, etc. At the time of the construction of the megalithic structures, the cosmic grid of energetic parts wasn't affected by modern activities that might interfere with the functioning of ancient mounds or energetic structures.

The burial-ground of the rulers of Egypt "The kings' valley" is situated in a meander of river Nile. There are hundreds of thousands of megalithic structures in the world that are built in the inner bends of water streams, meanders and confluence of rivers. There are also a great number of megalithic and religious structures built above the underground springs. The curvature of any matter works in the same way as a curve of a water flow, but only given that the matter has enough energy. In Malta as well as in other countries, there were ritual meeting places for people built in an ellipsoidal shape and partly submerged underground. Domes, vaults, apses, circular structures and other rounded structures have the same qualities that strengthen the energy. Some nations, for example the Celts, constructed clay mounds of squared or rectangular ground plan, where the zones were also dense, but in a different grid.

People used to supplement their body energy by the use of all kinds of megalithic structures. However, this is just a first finding, which could be compared to a snowball, which eventually grows into an avalanche. It is described in technical literature, how some rocks of various chemical compositions were exactly transported (pyramids, Stonehenge, Machu Picu and others) in order to achieve proper combinations. It's necessary to clarify their interactions and explain the chemical processes of the rocks, which affected the energy. Therefore, it's not only about supplying bodily energy but also about the quality of the energy and the optimal transformation of it onto the cellular membranes.

If we want to continue in uncovering the secrets of ancient past, we must begin with the fact that we can't bluff ourselves with explanations of the megalithic cultures, which are not logical. We must also respect the fact that we have something to do with a civilisation whose technical maturity we don't understand yet, or possibly have lost knowledge of. ## Book Review: The Wessex Astrum: Sacred Geometry in a Mystical Landscape

 by Peter Knight and Toni Perrott

The discovery of an ancient hexagram encoded onto the Wessex landscape, involving Stonehenge, Avebury, Glastonbury, other sacred hills, holy springs and wells and Knights Templar sites. Over 500 miles of alignments form this incredible landscape of wonder.

Follow Peter and Toni's journey of discovery as they discover new megaliths, dowse energy flows, decode secret symbolism and much more (sacred geometry, Knights Templar and Freemasonic sites and symbolism, the St Michael Line, crop formations and a pregnant Mary Magdalene).

In addition to the text the book is illustrated with images and maps; a comprehensive index and grid references of various sites. For more information about the book and forthcoming book launch events in Glastonbury (Oct 1st), Bournemouth (Oct 8th), London (Oct 18th), and Axminster (Oct 25th) log on to www.stoneseeker.net
