VOLUME 5, ISSUE 4.

April 2010

April 2010 and we welcome the Findhorn Foundation and Community to the Wessex Research Group Network www.findhorn.org. A welcome also to Christian Hummel from the USA who will be facilitating a workshop in Cork.

The month ahead sees the Edinburgh Theosophical Society start a series of study and discussion groups entitled the "Snake and the Rope" (email Christine at christinebrian@totalise.co.uk for further information). The Thames Valley Dowzers begin a series of dowsing tuition sessions (further information can be found at www.thamesvalleydowzers.org.uk) and the West Wessex Healers start a series of Monday drop in healing sessions. Contact Marina (tel. 01373 466391).

The latest addition to the on-line article archive is "Heal the Polarization" by Patricia Diane Cota-Robles.

Creating Sacredness in our Homes by Christan Hummel

In our modern age, we have more reason than ever before to find the sacred amid the mundane. Can ancient ceremonies help us to restore harmony between man and the environment?

The beating of a shaman's drum, the labyrinth at Chartres, stone monuments in Ireland, Feng Shui, what do they all have in common? All are attempts by different cultures to harmonize their space with their environment. Temples throughout time from Stonehenge to the Great Pyramid attest humanity's desire to create sacred space, a doorway bringing Heaven here on Earth; a kind of Yoga of the Land integrating mind-body and spirit.

In ancient times this knowledge of how to harmonize our living space with nature and the cosmos was passed down from the ancient Celts, Chinese, Egyptians, later the Pythagorean schools in Greece, and into West through Europe. Where can these traditions be found alive today in our modern culture? Feng Shui, the ancient Chinese art of harmonizing our homes with our surroundings, is inaccessible to most people and has become increasingly left in the hands of experts.

The earth is viewed by many indigenous cultures as a holographic reflection of the human body. Ancient Chinese and Vedic medicine believed that humans have a meridian system that carries the currents of life energy throughout our bodies, when they are open, flowing and healthy, so are our body's systems. Similarly, the earth also has these meridians as well.

They have been known by cultures all over the world for thousands of years. More recently coined "ley lines" by Alfred Watkins in 1921 this concept has now found its way into the common vernacular of our society. By attending to these sacred lines of energy within the body of the earth, through prayer and ceremony we help to restore a lost and ancient relationship of humanity with the Earth by creating a living bridge between Heaven and Earth.

While this may sound too simple for most to believe, case histories surprise even those who have witnessed the results, attesting to the timeless power of such practices and intentions. Cities throughout the world, Frankfurt, Bilbao, Auckland, Los Angeles, just to name a few, have experienced such results as lower crime rate, reduced drug use, lower pollution levels and revival of natural resources—all with such simple techniques that our ancestors practiced in times past.

Can the same be done for one's home? In short, yes. A few of the most common changes which people have experienced when harmonizing their space with their environment: more energy, better sleep, enhanced learning among students, improved relationships, increased financial flow, increased plant growth, better health among animals in the area, and more.

While anecdotal stories abound, scientific research has been conducted in Europe studying the connections between environmental stresses, earth energies not in a state of harmony, and A.D.D. (attention deficit disorder), cancer, and numerous other diseases. One such study was conducted in Germany. It showed out of 5,000 cancer patients, a correlation between exposure to negative electromagnetic energy lines and their patient's cancer in 93% of the cases studied. In Austria, Kathie Bachler studied 3,000 students with A.D.D. who had negative earth energies running through their homes. When negated, the ADD behaviour was reduced in over 90% of the cases.

These studies and many more are just some of the examples of the effects of imbalance in our Earth's energy systems today. If we accept the belief of indigenous cultures, we could add to the list of the effect of these imbalances distortions of weather patterns globally, increased volcanic and earthquake activity, and other "natural" disasters as well. Our ancient ancestors knew that prayer, ritual and ceremony were an essential part of keeping in balance the harmony of humanity and Nature. This is a tradition lost to most of us in our modern culture.

Today, our modern cities are testaments to a world addicted to unbridled growth at any cost. Electromagnetic stresses, pollution, and negative telluric energies plague us in a manner unprecedented in human history. In such conditions, is it possible to create sacred space in our living environments today?

While times have changed, basic principles have not. Sacred sound, sacred geometry, prayer, ceremony--all are still effective methods of raising the vibrations of the space where we live, and for our planet as well. Our modern times have created greater problems, but have also created different solutions to the same age-old quest: how to create sacred space on earth. Now is a crucial time to make our homes our temples--places where the sacred vibrations will radiate out to heal our families and communities. Book Review: The Little Book of the Soul by Ian Lawton

This simple pocket book contains a selection the most interesting near-death and past-life cases that support the idea of Rational Spirituality. For example; how did a Russian scientist left for dead in a mortuary for three days make contact with a sick baby... and wake up with a cure that all the doctors had missed?

What about the Indian girl with memories of a past life... who astonished her former husband by reminding him how he had borrowed money from her just before she died?

Or the Australian woman who recalled past-life details of a stone carving on the floor of a small cottage... and was able to locate it under decades of chicken droppings when brought to England for the first time? Written in a storybook style the book is interspersed with simple summaries and analysis. For further information log on to www.ianlawton.com

Book Review: Coincidences in the Bible and Biblical Hebrew by Hiam Shore

Arranging the colours of the spectrum, using their Hebrew names and in order of the gematric values of their names Professor Shore placed them on the horizontal axis of a graph. He then placed the colours according to their frequencies on the vertical axis and found that he got a straight line. Was it possible that whoever wrote the Torah, perhaps three thousand years ago, could have known about such things as the frequencies of different energies? Shore then took the Hebrew names for the Earth, Moon and Sun and set their gematria against their diameters, as we know them today and again he got a straight line graph. These astonishing results as well as many other findings led Shore to write this book, revealing the Hebrew text of the Old Testament in a completely different light, showing the Hebrew language in a profound new way.
