The Conundrum of Time

By Marian Matthews

Often people assume that mainstream science and esoteric matters are not compatible. This is not always true. Reality is so complex and multi layered but sometimes mainstream science can give us real insights into the way things actually work, without their explanation necessarily being the whole story.

When researching a topic I always look at the science first. To this end a Daily Telegraph headline grabbed my attention just a few weeks ago. It said "Is it time to rewrite the laws of physics?" This was actually a play on words because the article was actually discussing the physics of the concept of time itself. Unsurprisingly this is a topic that has been debated for thousands of years. Is it fixed? Does it actually exist or not? Is it linear or does everything happen at the same time and we just perceive it to be linear? Curiouser and curiouser!!!

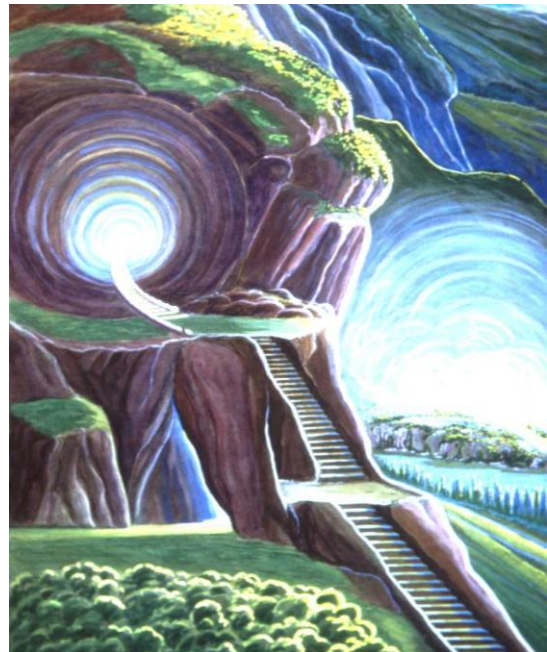

I was surprised to realise that what is often considered the alternative view of time, that linear time it is actually illusion, was actually some physicist's mainstream view. That is, as Einstein said,

"Physicist's believe the separation between past, present, and future is only an illusion, although a convincing one."

Others feel that time is a fundamental reality of the universe, and without understanding it, too many of the big questions of physics are left unanswerable. I began thinking about the true nature of time as we humans perceive it. There are two main alternative views in mainstream physics concerning the nature of time at the moment.

Linear; Sir Isaac Newton felt that time was absolute and linear and marches on regardless of the doings of the stuff of the universe.

Simultaneous or variable; Einstein thought that Newton was wrong. He saw time and space as part of an interwoven fabric; the presence of matter changes both, stretching the fabric like a weight on a sheet.

The truth is that on an everyday basis we feel that we are moving through time in an ordered manner. Things decay and change or come into existence around us. Laws of physics, thermodynamics in particular, such as entropy (or disorder) which means particles behave in a manner to give us that impression. It is often pointed out though that we do not know why these laws are as they are, or why the universe should have started the way it did. This may seem a very academic debate, but the principle does matter to us. This has massive implications for our journey though life and our assumptions of free will.

Obviously, on a day to day basis we understand time as linear, going in a straight line. Indeed it would be impossible to cope with life any other way. The truth is that although it makes no difference to our everyday lives, for the big picture of reality this is a vital difference. If linear time is an illusion and it is all happening at once, then the future may be fixed. Our free will may be called into question. Could this be why some people can see the future, because in a sense it has already happened?

If time is linear, then we cannot absolutely predict, unless we are really sure of all the rules of physics and the universe, which we are not, what the future will hold. The future can, then, also be changed by our decisions. Only time, in both senses, will tell which is the correct theory.

Another supplementary question, vital to our understanding of the universe that has to be asked is; how can time be simultaneous and seem linear at the same time? How can we get our heads around this concept? The easy answer is that our physical bodies, limited by our biology, are programmed, or have evolved, to perceive time as being linear. Our consciousness, which makes us us, perceives it to be so. It is also worth mentioning that our sense organs do not necessarily register all of what is around us in the universe.

The truth is as beings limited, as we are, by the quality of these sense organs (eyes, ears etc) and the capacity of our brains, we may not be able to understand the real answer. In the end it boils down to the ultimate questions of the nature of our consciousness and the real reason why we seem to be living in this universe at all. That is, who as human beings we actually are and what we are doing here. These are the real questions, and until we understand them we cannot really make sense of the conundrum of the nature of time. The question is very difficult and perhaps we are not supposed to know!!
