The Valley of the Bosnian Pyramids By Marion Briggs

There are many directions from which you can approach the pyramids in the Visoko Valley, Bosnia. From the air to Sarajevo, the large pyramid hill stands out. Coming by road from the south, you experience the beauty of the Bosnian landscape particularly along the Neretva Valley between Jablanica and Mostar, with its folding rock formations typical of parts of Bosnia and Hercegovina. Visoko lies about 30 Kilometres north west of Sarajevo.

Visoko is a town where two rivers, the Bosna and the Fojnica, meet. It is named after the Visoki Castle and the town of Visoki, which occupied Visočica hill. There are still remains of the castle on this hill, which is otherwise known as the Pyramid of the Sun. In 2006, Semir Osmanagić, on a visit to the archeological museum in Visoko, realised that the hill was in fact a pyramid. He already had experience of identifying through his research into pyramids around the world, including Central and South America. He had seen pyramids which had become covered in soil and vegetation and which, when this was removed, revealed the underlying pyramid form.

Exploration of the valley showed further pyramid structures and some tumuli. Dr Osmanagić also knew there was likely to be tunnels associated with these formations. He found that this is the case, with a labyrinth of tunnels known as Ravne. The structures have been named Pyramids of the Sun, Moon, of Love, of the Dragon and the Temple of Mother Earth. At the entrance to the valley in the north there is the Vratnica Tumulus. All of these formations have their own particular energy and atmosphere.

Excavations of the Ravne Tunnels have uncovered some strange phenomena. Carbon dating of organic material found in the tunnels makes them around 34,000 years old. Mysteriously, these tunnels had been filled in around 4,500 years ago. The Archaeological Foundation Pyramid of the Sun, established by Dr Osmanagić, is excavating the tunnels and removing the fill-in material with the help of miners and volunteers. It appears that the tunnels were created out of material put there after the ice age and the material from the tunnels might have been used to build the pyramids.

The infill material is easily distinguished from it. They have discovered water channels in tunnels which were left open. The water is pure and high in negative ions. The whole tunnel system is designed to give a high negative ion content to the air. The temperature is maintained at a constant level from the way the tunnels have been constructed, which allows air to flow through. This makes it a healthy place to be and many people have felt their health improve after spending time there. There are places where you can see orbs and a strange mist which seems to be directed by its own consciousness. The Valley of the Bosnian Pyramids continues on Page 4.

Scientific measurements of ultra sound emanating from the top of the Sun Pyramid show that there is a beam of energy that gets stronger the further it goes above the pyramid. There is the likelihood that this pyramid is generating energy and could give clues to developing technology for a free energy system. The pyramids are built with a conglomerate which proves on testing to be a material far harder than anything we can create today. The moon pyramid has a spiral pavement angled toward the centre and there is a strong sense that the ancients who used this structure had water flowing down for some ceremonial or initiatory purpose. Comparison with the natural formations I mentioned earlier and the structure of the Visoko Pyramids shows that there are differences which point to the pyramids being created by some advanced consciousness. The structures of the valley are related in accurate sacred geometrical patterns!

This is a unique archeological project in that it is being investigated on many levels, archeological, scientific and spiritual, with a strong social community developing around it. Teams of scientists, archeologists, volunteers from around the world, psychics, dowsers and tourists visit in their thousands. Most of those who visit speak of it as a life changing and life enhancing event. They hear about the pyramids and know they need to go there

Book Review: Here be Dragons By Michael A Hodges

Here Be Dragons examines the history of dragons, the different types and the cultural differences, while trying to determine the idea of what is a dragon in different times and places.

The book relates stories of saints battling with dragons and deals with English folklore about them, concentrating on Wessex in particular, and especially the Christchurch area. There are many dragon carvings in Christchurch Priory.

Ley lines, which can also be known as 'dragon lines', as dragons are supposed to fly in straight lines, are straight line alignments which pass over ancient sites and horizon features. This book also identifies some local ley lines and these are shown in full in the appendices. Ley lines probably originated as Neolithic farming calendars and remained in use for generations. Such alignments exist all over Great Britain and overseas, wherever the first farmers needed calendars at a time before people could read and write.
