VOLUME 11, ISSUE 10.

October 2016

October and we welcome biodynamic farmer and researcher Ralf Roessner. Ralf will be speaking and facilitating workshops at the Earthstars Sacred Space group in London. FFI contact Marion at marionbriggs148@btinternet.com

The end of October marks Samhain or seed fall and the start of the Celtic New Year. Halloween derives from Samhain; both denoting a time when the veil between the physical and spiritual worlds is at its thinnest. The month ahead marks the end of one annual cycle and the beginning of another for many faiths (e.g. Jain, Hindu and Islam). The festival of Deepawali encourages people to move to the light through the festival of lights.

The Symbolism of the Rainbow

By Rowena Campbell

Energetic vibration is represented through colour; different colours being associated with different vibrations. The arrangement of colour in a rainbow presents the progression from Red to Orange, Yellow, Green, Blue, Indigo and Violet. The progression from red through to violet also represents a rise in the energetic vibration associated with each colour; something synonymous with the evolutionary progression of human and planetary consciousness.

The outward nature of the human being is symbolised by the colour red at the outside of the rainbow. At this point the rainbow is most easily perceived and would relate to the manifestation of the physical human being; that aspect of the self of which we are most aware.

A lifetime of experiences and the process of ageing provides us with a platform to develop the idea of the inner (spiritual) human being; one that has a deeper understanding of the manifested world and has raised their energetic vibration. This is represented through the progression from the colour red through to violet. Double and triple rainbows might be taken to symbolise the duality and trinity that may be found in man and the constant process of evolutionary refinement.

The colour orange located between red and yellow is the fusion of both. If any idea is the result of spirit (red) then orange represents the connection between this and the idea (yellow). Orange represents the concept of time, the movement of a spiritual impulse towards the understanding of an idea; an in-between state resembling the flow or movement of energy.

The starting point is the sensing of the movement of spirit. This point is not time but a sensing of ideas in possible relationships which can lead to a sensing relative to the understanding of these ideas. It is the movement of our consciousness towards full comprehension of the idea itself, is perceived as that which we call time. Time is therefore the sensing of the movement of spirit (red) to the full understanding of idea (yellow).

Green is located in the middle of the rainbow and with three colours either side of it is the bridge between idea (yellow) and purpose (blue). The three colours below green represent the conceptualisation of the manifested world by the conscious mind and the three colours above relate to the direction of the idea.

Green is also associated with growth and is symbolic of the role of the Christ in showing us how we might grow and progress in terms of our evolution, through the direction and application of ideas (a higher way).

The colour green symbolises more than just the idea of spiritual growth because associated with growth are the essence of what we might call change and evolution. Evolution requires us to be prepared to let go of the old; only then can a growth in consciousness become a reality. Patience and compassion are key during this process of letting go, for it requires us all to understand the idea of manifestation, the context and the implications of any event and accept that not only are we spiritual beings (in physical form) but beings with an involvement in creation and a responsibility relative to what happens.

The idea of time, change, growth and re-birth are all symbolised within the rainbow. I have often wondered what energetic vibrations lie beyond violet and all those parts of the rainbow that we cannot yet see. What is certain is that all roads eventually lead back to source and the idea of oneness.

Poseidon

The second son of Kronos and Rhea and the brother of Zeus and Hades, Poseidon was the ruler of the waves, a sea god liable to attacks of tempestuous rage. He rode the deep in a chariot pulled by splendid golden sea horses. In his hands was a mighty trident capable of stirring the waters to a fury.

A leading member of the Greek pantheon, Poseidon was a turbulent independent deity, mid way in function between the docile partner of the Earth mother and the dominant sky father. A benign aspect depicts Poseidon as the calmer of seas and the creator of islands. Sailors prayed to Poseidon and would sacrifice horses for safe passage.

Poseidon is said to have married Amphitrite, a nymph and ancient sea-goddess. Their union produced Triton half man half fish.
