What is the Etheric Body?

By Ben Walker

The densest of the asemantic or non-physical elements of the body, the etheric body is so called because it once believed to be composed of etheric substance. At the beginning of the twentieth century psychical researchers in Europe and America were led to believe that the etheric body was lodged between the atoms of the physical body and defined it as the 'intra-atomic quantity'. They claimed to have demonstrated that a human being the moment of death lost 50 – 80 grams in weight due to the departure of the etheric body. French researchers took photographs which apparently showed a misty ball of light over a body at death although subsequent experiments failed to confirm these findings and this line of investigation was discontinued.

Later in the twentieth century Soviet scientists spent decades conducting intensive studies with highly sophisticated instruments and established the existence of an energy system they call the bio-plasmic body. The bio-plasmic body functions with the physical, its brilliant emanations being photographed. Many of its characteristics bear a remarkable similarity to the etheric body of tradition.

Sensitives have never ceased to report; luminous mists and vaporous forms separating from the bodies of dying persons and animals and rising out of sight.

In esoteric tradition the etheric body is subject to natural law, survives the death of the physical body usually for a few weeks or more then disintegrates and disperses. The precise distinction between the etheric and the astral bodies is not always clear and the terms are often used synonymously, but according to occultists the etheric body has certain qualities that clearly distinguish it from the astral.

Though normally invisible it is none the less regarded as having a very refined type of materiality and is therefore known by such designations as the fine body, the subtle body, the between or tween body, the unifying body (since it integrates the astral with the physical), the counterpart body or the double. As the phantom body it may appear as a ghost although there are other reasons for such apparitions. It is also the beta body, a step beyond the physical, which is the alpha body.

The etheric system underlies the sensory reactions of the five senses, including pleasure and pain: it brings about the awareness of brain consciousness and governs all the needs and functions of the physical body such as hunger, sexual urges and procreation. The term P'O in Chinese meaning the physical soul has the alternative meaning of semen. The etheric body is the vehicle of life energy and of the instinctive and mechanical responses of the individual and is therefore called the vitalic body, energy body, instinctive or reflex body. Most psychic healing is directed at the etheric body. Because its emanations are part of the human aura it is called the auric body. Some think it is the factor for nervous energy so it is known as nervengeist (German for nerve spirit). Sometimes called the pre-physical body or the body veil, it is identified with the ectoplasm of mediumistic materialisation phenomena.

Since it was said to have the properties of what was known in earlier physics as the electric fluid or animal magnetism it was called the electric magnetic or fluidic body. The etheric double is the body of the subtle arteries and the plexuses (therefore also called the plexal body). Like the astral body it has a pearly luminosity and is called the luminous radiant or shining body or the body of light.

Sacred Geometry Works!

By Claudie Planche

Sacred Geometry is present in many traditions and civilisations throughout the world inspiring works of architecture and artistic mandalas. Use of the Phi golden ratio enhances man's physical and spiritual harmony with nature, uniting the cosmos, the plants, the minerals and the human body itself.

The universe is the living expression of patterns in matter: mater/pater, from the latin, or mother/father united in creation. Over the last 20 years, particularly in this country, there has been an abundance of crop circles and stunning geometric formations have been prompting the modern world to remember this universal wisdom that the ancients knew so well.

As numbers unfold in space, from the point to the line and onwards into the next dimensions, we can recognise the basic shapes. For example, fitting perfectly within a sphere, the 5 Platonic solids represent the Elements of Fire, Earth, Air, Water and Ether, the very alchemy of life.

Recently, Quantum Physics has started to expand our perception of matter, and as we go deeper into the subatomic world, we find electro-magnetic vibrations. The geometries of the Platonic and the Archimedean solids contain the same elementary polarity relating to the masculine and feminine potencies of creation.

It is not surprising that human beings have a natural 'resonance' with geometric shapes. Through muscle testing of specific key points in our body, as used in The Template work, we find that interaction with sacred geometry strengthens us physically and at all levels. It is time to realise how Sacred Geometry works beautifully around us and within us. FFI information about Sacred Geometry visit www.stargaia.com

The Stone Cradle. One woman's search for the truth beyond everyday reality

By Patrice Chaplin

In this gripping true-life memoir, Patrice Chaplin returns to the ancient city of secrets, Girona – its magnetism and enchantment never to be forgotten. It was in Girona that she first encountered the hidden Society, preserved since antiquity that influenced such illustrious figures as Salvador Dali, Jean Cocteau, Otto Rahn and Howard Hughes – and even the cryptical priest of Rennes-le-Château, Bérenger Saunière. What mystery is protected by this esoteric society?

Patrice continues her search to solve the enigmas of Girona. When the Society appears to offer her its secret – on the basis that she becomes its custodian and remains in Catalonia – she is faced with a decision that will change her life forever. Sensing danger, she must anticipate the intentions of those around her. Knowledge is not only power, but also the best way to survive. Drawn into a series of adventures, she is taken to holy sites, isolated castles and ancient graves said to be linked to religious figures from the distant past. Finally, Patrice is led to a secret chapel in an isolated place: the domain of the Stone Cradle. Once touched, she is told, one would always return, even in dreams. This is a place of multidimensional reality, but also of peril – a portal to the unknown. What is its purpose? In The Stone Cradle Patrice Chaplin discovers the secret of Girona and glimpses the truth beyond everyday reality.
