VOLUME 9, ISSUE 9.

September 2014

September sees a busy month ahead with many groups re-starting after a summer break. One such group is the Sherborne and Yeovil WRG who are looking for volunteers to help with its running. For more information contact Nicola Washington at nicolawashington@hotmail.co.uk

Following a recent flood the Library of Avalon is appealing for help. The library has lost all the magazines and periodicals, all books on the lowest shelves as well as carpet, a Hoover, an old computer.

If anyone has any magazines within the remit of the library, or could help with replacing book stock, or knows anyone who could help please get in touch. Email Andy at andyscott234@btinternet.com if you are able to help in any way. Despite the flood, the library are planning to hold an open day on September 27th

The Divinicus world tour begins this month starting with a book launch event in Glastonbury on September 1st moving on to nine countries in nine weeks. September events are organised for Glastonbury, Malmo, Berlin, Budapest and Sydney. For further information visit the Openhand web site www.openhandweb.org

The Energetic Properties of Stone and Water

By Miroslav Provod

Logan stones are heavy stones that are located around the world in the same way as menhirs, dolmens and other megalithic structures.

They are characterised by the fact that only points on the rock surface make contact with the subsoil or rock. Some Logan stones are positioned and balanced in such a way that the wind swings them. The way they are placed isn't coincidental but has its foundation in understanding the properties and flow of cosmic energy. Logan stones are positioned in such a way that the flow of cosmic energy energises the stones.

Whilst a Logan stone is a balanced rock, positioned in such a way so that it can accumulate energy through movement, a Menhir is a rock which spontaneously gains energy. Menhirs were used at a time when there were only natural energy sources of cosmic energy on the Earth such as underground springs, streams, rivers, large streams, sea currents and, thunderclouds. The energetic value of these natural sources of energy fluctuates causing the same thing to happen with Menhirs. During a time of drought for example the energetic value of Menhirs is much reduced.

Source: www.legendarydartmoor.co.uk

Ancient peoples understood this and solved the problem by balancing a stone in such a way that the stone could swing, they created a way of generating energy that compensated for the changes and disruptions to the natural external sources. The energetic parts of balanced rocks became stationary and could be used for an uninterrupted transport of energy

To test the hypothesis that a swinging action can harness natural sources of energy in stone I conducted a simple experiment.

A sphere made from red granite and weighing 6 kilograms was suspended from a tree branch by two pieces of meter long string. The energetic resonance of the stone was measured and it was then swung for fifteen minutes. The energetic resonance was then measured again and it was found that the granite sphere had gained energy, its aura expanding to two meters in radius. The experiment was replicated a number of times and in other places always with the same result.

The idea that megalithic structures were built only for ritual, calendar, agricultural and astronomical reasons wouldn't hold out for balanced rocks. It also suggests that ancient civilisations had an advanced awareness of the natural flow of cosmic and planetary energy and were able to harness it. How then does our current technology (and thinking) sit with this ancient understanding of the universal flow of energy?

It is well documented that water has memory. Let me give an example: A bottle of tap water is placed in or near a bed where someone sleeps for at least six hours overnight. During that time, water gains energy from the human body which can be measured by a dowsing rod, showing an increase in the radius of the water's aura.

The size of the increase can be affected by a number of factors including an increase in bodily charge due to alcohol consumption, the electronic charges of surrounding objects, changes in charge of the building we sleep in (e.g. due to wind friction) or the proximity of thunder clouds.

Simple experiments can be conducted to show the effects of microwaves on water. A student in Sussex recently looked at this.

Filtered water was divided into two jars. The first was heated in a pan on the stove to boil, and the second in a microwave oven. After cooling to room temperature the water was used for watering two identical plants placed in flower pots. On the third day there was a noticeable drop of leaves on the plant watered with water from the microwave. The same plant died on the ninth day. This experiment was replicated and produced the same results.

My own experiments indicate that water heated in a microwave gains an energy charge that can be either beneficial or detrimental to human health depending on the magnitude of the charge. Charges ranged in scale from (and increased in a non-linear fashion) from 1 up to some high unidentified value, which may be equivalent to the SHC (Spontaneous Human Combustion) value. Charges were also found to be influenced by external factors including other electrical charges.

Many researchers have commented that food prepared in a microwave oven is accompanied by a destructive process. Molecules of food are set into rapid motion by microwaves and their mutual friction denatures the natural properties of the food; the destruction of vitamins, minerals, proteins, and the creation of new unknown substances. During the Second World War microwaves were banned from use to prepare food for soldiers.

Ancient peoples did not have access to microwave and other modern technology but worked directly with natural forces. As our technology has evolved our thinking has become detached from looking at energy from a cosmic perspective. Surely it is time to bring the two aspects back together and use what we have developed in a sustainable and constructive manner that will benefit of the Earth and all the life on it. Book Review: The Illusion of Separation - Exploring the Cause of Our Current Crisis

By Giles Hutchins

Our modern patterns of thinking and learning are all based on observing a world of 'things', which we think of as separate building blocks. This worldview allows us to count and measure objects without their having any innate value; it provides neat definitions and a sense of control over life. However, this approach also sets humans apart from each other, and from nature.

In reality, in nature everything is connected in a fluid, dynamic way. 'Separateness' is an illusion we have created — and is fast becoming a dangerous delusion infecting how we relate to business, politics, and other key areas of our daily reality.

Giles Hutchins argues that the source of our current social, economic and environmental issues springs from the misguided way we see and construct our world. With its roots in ancient wisdom, this insightful book sets out an accessible, easy to follow exploration of the causes of our current crises, offering ways to rectify these issues at source and then pointing to a way ahead. This book can be obtained from Floris Books. It is also available as an E-book. www.florisbooks.co.uk
